Books for Girls Who Hate Books

A Dream to Touch by Anne Emery

Marya Rose thought that love and happiness could never be hers as long as she stayed on Weed Street. But she was wrong.

Drop-out by Jeannette Eyerly

Donnie has an unhappy home; Mitch has trouble at school. Together they leave their troubles behind and run away to get married.

A Girl Like Me by Jeannette Eyerly

Robin broke off with Randy in time, but Cass dated Brew until it was too late.

Good-bye, Amigos by Robert Young

Cathy tries to help the Mexican migrant-workers—she tries hard; yet they seem to turn against her.

Green Light for Sandy by Carol Morse

Sandy tried to drop out of school; but she stayed and, by graduation, realized what she would have missed if she had followed her first impulse.

Heartbreak Street by Dorothy Butters

Concern for her brother leads Kitty to join Peewee in cleaning up their slum neighborhood.

Hold Yourself Dear by Pauline Smith

Merle's reputation for never having been kissed would be no help in getting dates—or so Harriet said.

I Always Wanted to Be Somebody by Althea Gibson

Courage, determination, and lots of hard work took Althea from the streets of Harlem to the top of the tennis world.

It Could Happen to Anyone by Margaret Craig

To anyone—even to the nicest boy and girl when they're in love.

Jacqueline Kennedy, a Woman for the World by Robert Harding

As campaign wife, First Lady, and unofficial ambassador, Jackie became a beloved figure everywhere.

Judy George, Student Nurse by Patti Stone

Young Mr. X, the problem patient of Bonifacio General Hospital, brings mystery and romance to Judy's senior year.

Love Can Say No by Lillian Pohlmann

Should she marry Duncan now, or should she go to her father's new family in California? Jen had only a little while to decide.

Mary Ellis, Student Nurse by Hope Newell

In Mary Ellis's second year of training, the scene shifts from robbery in the nurses' quarters to drama in the operating room.

Mind Your Manners by Betty Allen

Telephone tactics, dance data, motor manners—for teens in the know.

The Mystery of Blue Star Lodge by Adele Fletcher

Four girls on a bicycle trip pedal their way to mystery and adventure.

Mystery of the Forgotten Diamond by Robin Gottlieb

Senior year looked dull for Joan until she opened her desk drawer and found a coded message.

A New You; the Art of Good Grooming by Emily Wilkens

"How to eat right, dress right, make up right" to develop your natural beauty and a pleasing personality.

Questions Teen-agers Ask by Sheila Daly

From tens of thousands of teen-age letters a newspaper columnist for teens collects the questions asked most frequently—on dating, money, personality, parents, and topic A.

Ring around Her Finger by James Summers

Frightened by their new responsibilities, teen-agers Lucy and Jack struggle to save their marriage.

Runaway Teen by Ann Finlayson

When her mother and stepfather seem to forget her sixteenth birthday, Libby runs off to Chicago to earn her living.

Sometimes Magic edited by Hallie Burnett

Have you ever been in love with an "unsuitable" boy? Has your best friend betrayed your confidence? Have you ever made a decision that marked you as "different"?

Teen-age Tales edited by Ruth Strang

Teens like you have dating problems, worry about popularity, and look forward to the world of work and marriage.

To Catch a Spy by Amelia Walden

When Sally Templeton impersonates a suspected spy found dead, her very life is at stake.
